"Capturing the Environment"

Quote

There is a category of photography that has always been important to me but doesn't seem to fit any particular genre. I have often needed to illustrate where my animals subjects live or where particular flowers grow. Most don't live in vast landscapes with wide views into the distance, but rather more intimate settings. Perhaps they live in a secret corner of the wood or in a rock-pool on the beach. I am calling these habitatas or environments. To illustrate many of my thoughts we will spend time in the woodland. Then later, we will expand those thoughts into other areas to incude beaches, moorland, etc. This lecture is informative and inspirational for beginners and experts alike.
